Mr. Huntington Gilchrist Describes Organization and Future Plans

Huntington Gilchrist, assistant to Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary of the League of Nations, addressed the college in the chapel last Saturday night on "The League As a Working Concern." Starting next Saturday for Geneva, the future home of the League, he has just completed a vacation in this county. Mr. Gilchrist is the husband of E. Brace, '20.

The League of Nations has been in existence since January 10, 1920, when the Peace Treaty of Versailles officially came into force, said Mr. Gilchrist, in letic Association last year. tracing its beginning. He then took up one at a time the three main bodies of the League, the Assembly, the Council and the Secretariat, with which he is especially concerned.

Robert Frost is an out-of-door poet. Even when he gives a picture of an interior, people are always looking out of the window at something.

One of the oldest customs in Bryn Mawr history will be observed Friday night when the Freshmen receive the lanterns from the Sophomore class.

1890, the second class in college, was about thirty poetical and twenty-eight the first to receive lanterns. The idea of presenting them originated from one lish writings are "Gitanjali," "The Cres- line, "the only lantern in Bryn Mawr," former professor of Greek.

> The lanterns given to 1890 were made of filigreed tin lined with red isinglass and stood only four inches high. They increased in size each year until 1904, when 1908 received the first lanterns of the type now used. Since then they have changed in shape and general proportions, but the size and the materials used have remained about the same. The color of the glass varies each year with the color of the Freshmen class.

Lanterns Given at Outdoor Play

Lantern giving was originally only an incident in the impromptu entertainment which the Sophomores gave the Freshmen. The earlier classes received their college for wild Indians. This was afterwards shortened into a few words of good advice and thence to "Good Luck." In order not to mar the solemnity of the occasion, the greeting is now written on a card attached to the lantern instead of being spoken. Later the ceremony was transferred to the night when the Freshmen received their caps and gowns and was moved from the campus to the cloisters.

TRANSLATION OF PALLAS

O dread goddess! Hear, O hear! Look favorably on us, we beg: grant us Blessed goddess!

Hear, O hear!

Make holy now our lanterns! May they always shine clear, showing the way and changing darkness to light!

Hear, O hear!"

A new Greek song will be sung by the Freshmen this year instead of "Over the way to the sacred shrine." The music, which was selected by L. Reinhardt, '21, and H. Hill, '21, is "Of Thy Mystical Supper," part of the Russian Church service by A. F. Lvoff. The words are written in classical Greek, transposed by K. Ward, '21, and H. Hill, '21, from Pericles' funeral oration by Thucydides. The translation is:

"We come, O goddess. We are lovers of beauty in just measure, and lovers of wisdom also. Wealth we encoloy but as an opportunity for action, for our goal is the supreme one and the hazards we regard as the most glorious of all. Let us remember now men who followed the right. Fair is the prize and the hope is great . . . beautiful and great."

PRACTICE IN PERSONNEL WORK

Graduates Train With Phila. Firms

Laboratory work for graduate students in the Industrial Relations group of the Department of Social Economy consists, as it did last year, in actual work with firms and factories once a week. Every Monday nine students leave, some at 6.10 o'clock, to work with the Department of Personnel in various establishments.

Firms which co-operate with the college in training the students are the A. M. Collins Manufacturing Company (paper boxes), Notaseme Hosiery Company, Henry Disston & Sons (saws), Midvale Steel, John Wanamaker Company, The Curtis Publishing Company, Edward Budd Manufacturing Company (motorcar bodies), Atlantic Refining Company (oil), Leeds & Northrup Company (tools).

Eight graduate students do their practice work at the Community Center this year and two under the local Red Cross "To regard the Bible as one book is chapters in Coatesville and Phoenixville,
