MISS KING SPEAKS ON EXHIBITION AT ACADEMY

Another unpleasantly evident quality was brutality, which ranged from refined vulgarity to coarseness. Especially to be condemned were the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Rush, who felt obliged to have two different and famous artists to paint them, Leopold Seyffert and Wm. Paxton. Even Lazar Raditz sometimes falls to a low level of unreality in his portraits.

Fleshly carnality is noticeable in such as Dewitt Lockman's Silver Dress or in Paxton's Wife. At times the artist becomes purely and simply vulgar as in the portrait of Col. John R. M. Taylor, by Richard Meryman.

Many men of justly good repute have in this year's Exhibition pulled down their standards. Victor Higgin in The Widower, and Hawthorne in Adoration of Mother had too little to say for the size of their canvases. Becoming superficial, some painters lost the fire altogether; others lost their effectiveness through lack of careful technique.

The enjoyable paintings were often portraits in feeling if not in name. Still life was interesting in several cases; The Silver Candelabra, by Elizabeth Paxton, lovely in color and texture, and Mrs. Hawthorne's Flowers were both noteworthy.

Several landscapes stood out; in some, emphasis was on the treatment of space or of atmosphere, in others on the decorative quality of color or line. Examples of these types were: Carl Krafft's Across and Beyond, John L. Johansen, The Hunters, and Ross Braught's Province-

In figure-painting, close to portraiture, Martha Walter had two or three attractive groups. Three portraits were pre-eminently worthy of consideration. Dickinson's representation of Edwin Dickinson had some very good points, though the face was hidden in a sort of mask of unreality. The Girl in Red of Henri might have been a study for the portrait of an Infanta and in spite of a few minor faults was really delightful. Abram Poole in his portrait of Mme. Orosoff, which was beautifully placed and excellently finished, has followed, in truth, the old tradition of portraiture.

Dear Editor:

You know the compelling influence of environment—a prom, a girl, moon and music. Sometimes, just the girl is all that is necessary: what about this ever increasing popular sport of proposing—the girl might

How to propose realistically and how to keep their acceptances and refusals in accord with your whims—immediate and future—is, I believe, the crux of a pertect line. #### Over Sophomores 8 - 0 Wins Championship

Defeating the Sophomores 8-0 in the final water-polo game last Tuesday, 1924's first team won the water-polo championship, held last year by 1923, and hung their banner on the gymnasium.

The Seniors played a more aggressive game throughout. In the third game of the finals last Monday night, the Sophomores went down to defeat at the hands of 1925, by a score of Dark Blue having won the first game, and the second being a tie, the game was hard fought and closely contested all the way through. 1926 opened it by a goal at the very start, followed by wild and purposeless playing. 1925 got the ball at the toss-up, but did not take advantage of its opportunities. After wild splashing and ineffectual pushing of the ball by everyone in the first half, the Juniors settled down to organized team-play. A long throw for the goal by C. Cummings, '25, was successful, and 1925 assumed the offensive. Quick and accurate scoring by G. Thomas, '26, and good goal defense by M. M. Dunn, '25, were the high points of the game.
