Philosophy Dept. Presents Lecture By Dorothy Walsh

Dr. Walsh, Smith Professor, Will Discuss "Literature And Truth"

Dr. Dorothy Walsh, assistant professor of philosophy at Smith College, will speak on Literature and Truth in the Music Room, Goodhart, Thursday evening at 8:30. This lecture is made possible through the Theodore and Grace deLaguna lectureship in philosophy established last year upon the retirement of Mrs. deLaguna by friends, colleagues and students.

Dr. Walsh received her A. B. degree from the University of British Columbia in 1923 and her M. A. from the University of Toronto in 1924. She was fellow in philosophy at Bryn Mawr from 1925-1926 and received her Ph. D. here. She studied under Mrs. deLaguna while she was at Bryn Mawr. She has written on aesthetics, ethics, metaphysics, language and poetry, and is remembered here as a very vivid and effective teacher.

The Theodore and Grace deLaguna lectureship in philosophy is designed to permit one or two speakers to be selected each year by the philosophy department. Dr. Walsh is the first speaker in this lectureship.

Bryn Mawr to Give Party for Wounded Men at Valley Forge

Through the Red Cross, Bryn Mawr has been granted the privilege of giving a quiet party on Saturday, March 3 for the wounded soldiers at Valley Forge General Hospital. Seventy girls have been asked to volunteer. The party is sponsored by the Bryn Mawr Red Cross unit and is supervised by Patricia Acheson '46 and Nancy Niles '47.

Transportation will be provided by the Red Cross Motor Corps, and the volunteers must be ready to leave Pembroke Arch at 5:30. Each car will be numbered and each girl will be allotted to a car. Following the party, the girl must return to college in the same car.

Since the girls are guests of the hospital and of the army, they must abide by their rules. The most important of these is that they must not leave the recreation hall. Otherwise, they are expected to entertain the wounded with cards and cheerful talk. A college octet will provide entertainment and the Red Cross will serve refreshments. Each girl will be asked to pay $1.50 to cover the cost of refreshments and ten lucky number prizes will be awarded.

A list will be posted in Taylor for those interested to sign up. If more than 70 volunteer those who have done the least war work will be eliminated. Those who sign up must be certain of attending. This is not a party for our pleasure but for theirs, and no one must go who is not prepared to accept her responsibility.

April Oursler, Designated as 'Fallen Woman' Brings Philosophic Approach to Editorship

By Alison Merrill '45

April Oursler, recently-elected editor of the College News, describes herself as a fallen woman. She has been falling, she says, ever since she was a little girl. Elected on the anniversary of having fallen and broken her toe, she reacts to her greatest fall with the thought: "I'm going to have to be neat and systematic." She will, further, have to heed the words of her father on the occasion of her falls: "Coordinate, April, coordinate."

To the editorship, April brings ample experience, only exceeded by the size of her feet. Joining the News in the middle of her Freshman year, and proceeding to the Editorial Board in her Sophomore year, she lays claim also to a summer's experience on the Swarthmore Phoenix as a sub-cub-reporter in her days of acceleration. She has since decelerated and insists that she has coined the word. Working last summer as a copy girl and assistant Letters to the Editor editor on the Herald Tribune, she brought back an amazing journalistic facility as well as the idea for Incidentally. Finally, she has served two years as campus correspondent for the Herald Tribune and two years as Merion's fire captain, which will fit a girl for any job.

A philosophy major, April has the claim to fame of being perhaps the first philosophy major to edit the News. The effect of this on our yellow sheet we hesitate to prophesy, but Mr. Nahm's only reply is, "I hope it doesn't make you any less a philosopher."

Actually, April's status as a philosophy major is distinctly shaky, since she entered college as a chemistry major, and quickly changed to biology after mid-semester. With mid-years she became an English major and steadfastly remained one until last year's Shakespeare paper. "So far," April comments, "I'm safe in philosophy." She complains, however, that Mr. Nahm thinks she is a Sophomore and Mr. Weiss forgets that she is a philosophy major, for which we could hardly blame him.

Experiencing distinct feeling of fright, the new editor plans to continue in the News such editorials as that on dramatic activities in an effort to campaign for more life on the campus and for more constructive activity. She promises to fight on for rescheduling and to inject more humor into the weekly journalistic effort, meanwhile injecting vitamins into herself to ward off constantly recurring ailments.

Undergrad Elections For '45-'46 Officers To Start Next Week

The election of officers for the chief undergraduate positions for the year 1945-46 will start next week to continue until spring vacation. The following procedure for the voting has been planned:

After nominations a description of the duties of the offices will appear in the News, along with pictures of the candidates and brief write-ups of their college activities. Students should attempt to know the candidates before voting takes place. The following week elections will take place in the halls directly after lunch. Voting will be by ballot, and all undergraduates will be required to sign their names as they cast their votes. Non-resident students are urged to be at the college for lunch on days when elections occur.

If any candidate receives 15 more votes than the sum of all the other votes cast, she is elected. If no candidate gets this plurality, revoting will be held the next day between the two or three highest candidates. In this case, the winner must have 20 more votes than the runner-up.

1st Semester Work Surveyed by McBride At Special Assembly

Goodhart, February 1. Speaking in a special assembly on the opening day of the second semester, Miss McBride pointed to this semester as a time for a new recognition of one's obligations as a student during war. She spoke also of changes in faculty membership, of extra-curricular activities, and of the academic picture of the first semester.

Obligations

Referring to study now as both a hardship and a privilege, Miss McBride asserted that "it is essential work which must be carried on and which can be carried on only by those who are able." The country will be short, Miss McBride said, in all fields of knowledge as a result of the war, and our education will help men see the importance of returning to college after the war. Further, we will have a background for an understanding of problems after the war and the possibility for action.

Changes

To the faculty, the second semester brings back Mr. Watson of the Geology Department after six months in Montana and Miss Kraus to the Department of Sociology after work with UNRRA. Mr. Carpenter will leave during the second semester to give a series of lectures at the University of California. His place will be taken by Mr. Post of Haverford.

Activities

The past semester, Miss McBride announced, had fewer academic casualties than last year, partly due to the new plan for attendance at classes. A survey of extra-curricular activities indicates few of us working at the top of our abilities. The situation now calls for help from those who have so far held back.

Dr. Thomas To Speak On 'Way of St. James'

The well-known literary historian, Dr. Henry Thomas, Keeper of Printed Books at the British Museum, will speak under the auspices of the Spanish Club in the Common Room on Saturday afternoon, February 10 at 4:15.

This talk, called the Way of St. James, will be illustrated with slides and based in part on the book of that name written by Georgianna Goddard King, former head of the Bryn Mawr Art Department. This subject concerns the pilgrimage of St. James from France to Spain.

Dr. Thomas, an expert on sixteenth century Spanish printing, is the author of Spanish Romances of Chivalry and of the Short Catalogue of Sixteenth Century Spanish Books. His lecture Saturday will be given in English and is open to everyone. Tea will be served in the Common Room at 3:45.

Harvard Concert With Bryn Mawr Notably Executed

Enthusiasm, Delicacy Combine To Set High Standard Of Singing

This year's Harvard-Bryn Mawr concert, the second in the college's history, was characterized by a remarkably high standard of execution with both vigorous enthusiasm and sensitive delicacy.

Although the program ranged in period from 1400 to 1945, both the joint renditions and the separate college selections were performed with an almost perfect tonal blend. The musical rapport evident during the whole evening was notable particularly in view of the fact that the colleges had had less than two hours of rehearsal before the concert.

The performance of Irving Fine's clever choral patterns from The New Yorker, probably the most striking part of the program, is an indication of the alertness of choral direction, but above all of the live spirit which characterizes both choirs.

Bryn Mawr's performance of the two modern Ave Maria's was notable for its full round tone and exquisite expressiveness. The Dufay chanson and the Welkes madrigal deserve special mention as examples of smooth blend and acute sense of tempo.

Harvard's group of madrigals were presented with colloquial charm. The diction of the Bacchanale and the Patience choruses was unusually clear and the imaginative interpretation of the Sulligan selections was striking in contrast to the usual hackneyed performances of such music.

Powerful intensity and brilliance in the dramatic cut-offs characterized the rendition of Handel's Draw the Tear from Hopeless Love. A truly expressive delivery of the magnificent Thompson Alleluia closed the concert on the perfect note.

Forsdyke Will Speak On British Museum

Sir John Forsdyke, one of the foremost archaeologists of Britain and Director and Principal Librarian of the British Museum since 1939, will speak Saturday evening at 8:00 in the Music Room on The British Museum in War.

Sir John, graduate of Keble College, Oxford, began working with the British Museum in 1907. Editor of the Journal of Hellenic Studies from 1912 to 1923, he became a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London and of the Librarians Association, and, later, Honorary Secretary of the Hellenic Society. From 1932 to 1936, he was Keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum.

His written work has been especially concentrated in the field of Mycenaean pottery, although he is also author of the first volume of the British Museum catalogue on prehistoric pottery.

Rescheduling

Recommendations made to the faculty Curriculum Committee will be based on the answers to the questionnaires distributed tonight. Complete and immediate replies will enable the committee to take immediate action.

Nurses' Aide

The recent faculty decision to give credit allowances to students for Nurses' Aide is a sign that Bryn Mawr has finally declared war. It is hoped that students who have not signed up for Nurses' Aide will realize that it brings an added responsibility to them in keeping up in the other types of war work.

The sacrifice of a half unit of academic credit in response to the present nurse shortage is an unprecedented step in Bryn Mawr's history. It shows that the ivory tower accusations are groundless, and while regrettable in some respects, is a fine gesture in time of crisis. The response to the appeal for Nurses' Aides has been in keeping with the spirit prompting it.

The fact that Nurses' Aide has been given a special status, however, must not blind the remaining five-sixths of the student body. We have not been working to capacity on other vital war-work, particularly bandage-rolling. Bandage-rolling is just as important as Nurses' Aide, and should be viewed in the same serious light that has led the faculty to make the present radical change. Those of us who cannot give ten hours a week should feel obligated to do as much as possible.

Parting Words

Any attempt to define the function of the College News is of necessity difficult, nor can its retiring editors speak with the voice of authority on the subject. We can only state the aims which we have tried to achieve through the year; we can only pass on to those who follow a tradition.

As we have visualized it, our function has been to report news of interest to the campus, to reflect undergraduate opinion in so far as we are able, and to serve as a medium of expression for student opinion. Beyond this, we have attempted to maintain interest outside the college chiefly through editorials on national and international matters, through news of other colleges, and through reviews of books and plays.

The interest of the College News is largely conditioned by the activity of the campus itself. In 1944-45, taking up our editorial duties with no preconceived crusades in mind but supporting various issues as they arose, we campaigned for the maintenance of the Self-Government constitution, insisted on some attention to the problem of rescheduling, pledged our full support to the UVAP program, attempted to reflect the conflict over the national election, and gave attention to new groups and clubs, both political and literary.

We were fortunate in having a year in which the campus participated more fully than ever before, and we both prophesy and hope for greater activity, of fuller participation in the war effort. To the College News, notably free as it is from any control or censorship and yet with that freedom possessing a greater obligation, may it be a year of achievement.

Opinion

Former Bryn Mawr Student Approves New Nurse's Aide Resolution

(The College News prints excerpts from a letter from Leila Jackson, a former member of the class of 1946 who joined the WAVES last fall. Stationed at Milledgeville, Georgia, she is attending a storekeepers' school).

This is a rather late response to the letters in the News of January 17 about Nurses' Aides. I feel so strongly on the subject that I had to take time out from practicing number drills to put in my two cents worth to back up the campaign for more volunteers and for more time in which to do Nurses' Aiding—particularly for the workers, because I know that there is time for most of the girls to do it even though it means a heavy schedule.

Wounded

In one evening in Atlanta I counted 10 men on crutches minus a leg and any number with other kinds of wounds, some permanent scars and some with only temporarily incapacitating marks of the battle areas. There is a huge army hospital up there with WACs, nurses' aides, and civilian army aides. The papers are full of their shortage of help.

Realization

Four of the girls in my company who were nurses' aides are planning to go on helping in the local hospital or military hospital wherever they may be stationed. Even this navy school seems preposterously civilian and pleasant. From the isolation of this small Georgia town the war seems almost as far away as it did in the academic remoteness of college. When one's immediate job is to study hard to acquire either a scientific skill or a broad outlook and social perspective, literary facility or whatever one's major and purpose are, it is natural that the war should seem remote. Except for those whose husbands and very close friends are overseas it is not entirely a real war. The minor inconveniences of restrictions in this country are so trivial that we do not realize that this is a world war and that other countries are living war-ruled lives.

Participation

As Nurses' Aides the girls can actually become part of the struggle without giving up, even for a few years, their preparation for peace. History, politics, sociology and economics mean more to those who have shared the abnormalities of war. You cannot comprehend what it means to the men of this generation until you have taken part in the struggle yourself. By helping in the hospitals, by enlisting in the armed forces (which is also a lot of fun) by using one's abilities and strength in the immediately essential tasks, it is possible to have something preserved for the peace.

All-Out

For me it was not possible to put my whole effort into making college a fulltime war job; it was too much fun and too distracting. In the Navy I feel more a part of the war. Unless a girl is actually putting nearly all her time into studying I think she has not even the faintest excuse for not doing a volunteer emergency job.

I can't stress enough the importance of everyone's being personally aware of the impact of war upon normal life and of the completely different way of living that is required when war is present.

Red Cross Needs Bandages; Urgent Appeal for B. M. Volunteers

To the Editor:

An urgent appeal to all "Surgical Dressings Volunteers" has just come from the Ardmore chapter of the Red Cross. Although the stocks of Red Cross dressings in the European theatre have been ample up to this time, the recent crucial developments on the western front have brought forth an immediate need for 45,000,000 dressings. The "Surgical Dressing auxiliaries" all over the country must meet this new emergency. Our Bryn Mawr unit is being called upon to help meet the local Valley Forge requirement for 2000 bandages.

This is a tremendous challenge in view of the fact that our first semester record averaged about 200 bandages per week—a mere drop in the bucket. Here is a chance for those of you who were not able to arrange your program to fit the Nurses' Aide course, to serve in other war work. The new hours are Wednesday evenings, Thursday afternoons, or Saturday mornings. One of these times can fit anyone's schedule.

Sincerely,

Marge Richardson '46

Doris Braman '46

Chairmen of Surgical Dressings College Red Cross Unit.

AWVS Motor Unit Requests Volunteers

The Motor Transport Unit of the American Women's Voluntary Service has requested volunteers from Bryn Mawr whose duty it will be to drive trucks, jeeps and passenger cars one or two days a week. Members of the Motor Transport Unit hold the status of a WAC or WAVE and actually release an enlisted man although their job is on a voluntary basis.

This is an excellent opportunity for students who felt themselves unable to work in hospitals as Nurses' Aides and yet wish to participate in the war emergency. The job demands eight hours a week, from nine until five.

The qualifications include driving experience, three letters of recommendation, and proof of citizenship. The age limitations are

Current Events

Common Room, Jan. 5. Describing the problems of postwar Britain, Mr. Gilbert Walker, professor at the University of Birmingham, named the three principal questions as export trade, full employment, and housing.

The income from capital invested abroad paid for half of the import trade on which England depends for life, Mr. Walker declared. Since that capital has been liquidated, imports must be paid out of current earnings. The output of food in Great Britain is equal to half the consumption, the rest coming from the Commonwealth of Nations, but that source will be virtually cut off after the war. Therefore, export trade in exchange for importations, must be increased 50%.

"Throughout the nineteenth century, there was cyclical unemployment," Mr. Walker said, "the boom periods obliterating the memory of the bad times up to 1914. Then the constant upward progression was ended in depression, and a deceleration set in. From 1920 to 1940 unemployment, which remained at about one million, although widely distributed, represented a great cost to the nation. An equitable employment program could have created enough wealth to replace capital equipment, whose disrepair is now being reflected in British industrial inefficiency.

"If the emergency is sufficiently urgent, government can create full employment," the speaker said. "In England, democracy is on the defensive," he added, "since it has meant the freedom to be unemployed. Now the public demands maintenance of full employment. The solution of the problem must be found in the chosen battlefield of professional economists and left wing statesmen who see no need to relinquish democracy in the face of full employment, and businessmen and bankers who fear that society must collapse if full employment is upheld.

The housing problem is the greatest need, Mr. Walker observed. Due to the prohibitive cost of houses, workingmen have been relegated to poor shelters, and buildings well constructed before the Industrial Revolution are still in

WIT'S END

When I consider how our nights were spent, and each pale dawn seemed iller than the last, we shall but weakly wail in boding you farewell; farewell the gruesome galley and the glue; farewell mad deadline, tailless head, take us hence with you, for our fouler days are done!

When, musing back to that misguided day when we tossed our books into the basket and started eroding our fingernails on the typewriter, and learning to read upside-down and backwards, we sometimes wonder where we strayed and lost our pure essences. For somehow, somewhere, there was never quite enough advertising to buy shoes for baby, and all we had to give was gobbled up, and at night we dreamed of holes that one filled with nauseous trivia to stave off engulfment.

'Tis done! Give us back our head—all of it, whether eighteen condensed or thirty-eight italic. Lead us like a paragraph back to the gist of our matter, and remember that all good things peter out at the end. Take from us discussing discussions, give us back the verb to be, then turn us out to pasture in the passive tense forever. Forbidden fruit! This is the last grammatical sentence I shall ever write, so help me.

Harvard Glee Club Celebrates in Pem West With Organ Concert, Photographic Evidence

by Patricia Platt '45

Harvard has gone. Although their sojourn was brief, lasting from Saturday dinner to eleven A. M. on Sunday morning, they have not evacuated the ground floor of Pem West without leaving an impression on it. The night was more for celebration than for sleep.

To begin with, the Harvard Glee Club worked up a state of great excitement over the prospect of spending a night in a female dormitory. When they stampeded in at two-thirty in the morning after the dance, the very foundations of Pembroke shook, according to competent observers who were trying to get some sleep. Harvard came in the back door, but instead of creeping up to bed in the approved manner they spent much of the night taking pictures of each other to prove that they really had slept there. They finally gathered around an organ that a girl had inadvertently left in a ground floor room, and proceeded to play and chant until three-thirty.

The organ had previously been a bone of contention. After dinner a friend of the owner's sneaked down into the male quarters and tried to abscond with it. She was caught red-handed by the new tenants, who slammed the door on her, and leaned on it until it was time to leave for the concert.

By and large, sneaking down the staircase in Pem West last Saturday night was bound to have consequences. Mrs. Howe, the warden, was awakened from sound slumbers by the noise of footsteps plodding downward. Thinking that it was the middle of the night, she stumbled to the landing in alarm, and commanded the culprits to appear. Nothing happened. Actually the hour was only eleven P. M. and all males were busy exercising their lungs on Goodhart stage. Two hungry souls had gone downstairs in quest of a can opener. When they heard Mrs. Howe they maneuvered rapidly up the back stairs, and surprised her from the rear.

The next morning, when the visitors had gone, Pem West was amazed to find a series of notes on all their doors addressed to Mr. Davis, the porter. They were requests to be roused at fifteen-minute intervals, starting at seven-fifteen. Pem is wondering if Harvard is disappointed at not having its shoes shined too. A slightly sad tale rests with the seven-fifteen riser. One girl, in a bantering manner, told a guest that he had better be up for breakfast at a quarter to eight to avoid the rush. Apparently he took her at her word, for when she groped into the dining room at one minute of nine he was in the middle of his third breakfast, and still waiting for her.

Home for Incurables In Need of Workers

The Philadelphia Home for Incurables, which now has only 40 nurses as compared to 65 before the war, is in dire need of volunteers. The work, for which no training is required, resembles something between Nurses' Aide and Gray Ladies. Sixteen students are now wanted for this vital work, to go to the Home on the following days: two on Mondays, two on Tuesdays, one on Wednesday, two on Thursdays, one on Fridays, and four on both Saturdays and Sundays. Anyone who can give five hours, from three to five any afternoon in the week, should get in touch with Gwen Lege in Rockefeller.

Bryn Mawr has received a letter from Mrs. Fuller, who is the treasurer of the Home, for the 99 hours of work 12 students have given this year. Those who have already done outstanding work are Emily Evarts who volunteered 15 hours, and Nancy Bierwirth, Marion Moise and Agnese Nelms who have each given 13 hours. Eight other students who have helped at the Home are Louise Brown, Ann Dudley, Helen Einhorn, Ruth Lester, Toby Locke, Katherine Lutz, Jane Ward and Gerry Pattison.

18-55 but students need written permission from their parents. The college will provide a medical certificate, and the three pictures which are required may be made in the five and ten cent store.

Information concerning this type of work may be obtained through the Bryn Mawr War Alliance. Interviews are held every Tuesday and Friday between ten and four-thirty in the Bankers' Security Building on Walnut and Juniper Streets in Philadelphia. The expenses will be $2.75 for insurance, and the cost of a uniform after fifty hours of service.

Miss Tabor Explains Hudson Labor School

In 1939 the school moved to West Park, New York, the home of the first director, Hilda Smith. Since that time it has been increasingly difficult to enroll workers for a long period of time due to the war time demands that have been forced upon them. In order to meet these demands a short-term training period of a week or more was instituted to co-ordinate with a longer six week period.

Classes fall into three groups, Economics, English and Drama. Each course has a specific purpose that is blended in with the other two so that the students can appreciate the value of Economics and English in their ordinary life.

Last year eight undergraduates representing the top women's colleges were at the school. The function of these undergraduates was to act as observers, students and assistants. Their particular work depended upon their skill and as far as possible their desires. Their particular help was required in teaching and recreation. Miss Tabor is interested in all of those students who are considering attending the summer session of the Hudson Labor School and will return again in March or April to meet them.

Elections

The Fencing Team takes pleasure in announcing the reelection of Katherine Lutz '45 as captain and the election of Charlotte Rider '47 as manager.

Harrington, Fowler, Hart Urge Teaching

earned in teaching, she said, holds no compensation, but there is great compensation found in the satisfaction of receiving a response from the minds of the children.

Miss Harrington of Columbia University, said that teaching can be both exciting and wearing, but that the fact that college classes are composed of both fewer and more mature students makes it possible for the teacher to get under the surface and teach thoughts on the basis of the facts learned earlier. Ideas can be taught to the many different kinds of students and there is opportunity for more research. Naturally college professors must have a greater education than other teachers, and there is more competition from men.

'48's Freshman Show Given Title 'Tart Art'

The Freshman Show, a great event every year, will take place on February 17 in Goodhart Hall at 8:30 P. M. Tickets cost $1.20, and the proceeds of the show go to the fund for lanterns started last year.

The entire class will have some part in the show, and tryouts are being held this week. Entitled Tart Art, the show centers around an art museum—further than that we cannot ask. As for the class animal, the manager, Ada Klein, will only hint mysteriously that it might be found in a Rock bathtub at 6:00 on Friday, February 16.

The officers of the show are as follows:

- Manager ..... Ada Klein
- Business Manager ..... Nellie Keffer
- Stage Manager ..... Laura Martin
- Posters ..... Cynthia Haynes
- Music ..... Katherine Landreth
- Dancing ..... Pat Hochschild
- Costumes ..... Louise Sheldon
- Lights ..... Betty Smith

It's great to be here... Have a Coca-Cola

...or helping a soldier feel at home
When he's back on furlough, three words, Have a Coke, bring a soldier's old life back to mind... his days after school or after work, with the gang and with his girl. Ice-cold Coca-Cola holds a friendly place in American life. It should have a place in your family icebox. Wherever Americans go, Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes,—has become a symbol of our friendly way of life.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke.
