

Further Information of the Asylum.

IN the Third Month, 1816, an account of the Asylum was published, exhibiting a view of the progress of the institution to that period. The contributors, at their late meeting, believed it proper to instruct the managers, to circulate information of the present state of the establishment; not only for the satisfaction of those who have liberally furnished means for its support, but in the hope that it might awaken the attention of others, and thereby add to the number of its friends.

The requisite preparation being made, for the accommodation of patients, it became necessary to procure a superintendent and matron, to whose care the institution should be entrusted. After mature deliberation, the managers appointed Isaac and Ann Bon-sall, to these important offices, in the Third Month, 1817. On the fifteenth of the Fifth Month following, the Asylum was opened for the reception of patients.

It was, on many accounts, desirable, that, for some time at least, the number of admissions should be limited; and that, in the first instance, a preference should be given to recent cases. But, it was soon found, that this arrangement could not be strictly adhered to, and there were introduced to the care of the institution, at the threshold of the experiment, several patients, whose cases embraced variety of character; under the unhappy influence of which, nearly all of them had laboured for many years. These were circumstances, calculated to render the exertions to be employed for their restoration, extremely unpromising; and for some time, but little amendment was observable in most of them. Toward every description of cases however, whether the disease was of longer or more recent duration, or whether the symptoms were mild or severe, treatment the most soothing and gentle, was uniformly extended. The superintendent and matron, with the resident physician and assistants, were thus enabled to obtain the confidence, and to produce a degree of discipline amongst the subjects of their care, the accomplishment of which, by such means, was considered an object of primary importance. Having acquired this desirable control, an opportunity was afforded, for minute investigation of the peculiar character of each case, showing the medical remedies necessary to be employed, as well as pointing out those essential moral auxiliaries, which sympathetic feeling and an attentive observation of mental disorders, are eminently calculated to suggest. Steadily pursuing these modes of management, those concerned in the application of them, were not long without satisfactory evidence of their efficacy; and the feeling mind, in contemplating the success attendant on these efforts, has equal occasion to be humbled and encouraged. Toward the production of those benefits, which are recognized in the cure of several, and the melioration of the condition of all the patients, that have hitherto been admitted into the Asylum, much has depended, under the Divine blessing, upon the healthfulness of the situation, the opportunities for recreation, furnished to the patients, in the spacious yards, connected with the house; as well as their using the exercise of walking upon the premises, and of riding in the vicinity; with employment of the men in the garden and fields, and of the women in suitable female occupations. In the enjoyment of these advantages, the retired situation of the farm, and the intervention of prohibitory rules, afford to the patients a protection from the gaze of idle curiosity, and the conversation of unfeeling inquirers; a privacy calculated to inspire their troubled minds on every dawn of intellect, and in every moment of calmness, with consoling evidence, that they are indeed regarded as men and brethren. But in the enumeration of favouring circumstances, the character of the building deserves to be particularly noticed. Experience has proved, that the scale of its dimensions is not greater than was required, to adapt it to the purposes for which it was intended. Had it not comprised, in the extensive wings, single ranges of chambers for patients, with the accommodation of ample and airy galleries, likewise a safe and certain mode of warming those apartments, together with the advantages derived from the commodious day rooms of the centre building; it is difficult to conceive how adequate comfort could be afforded to the afflicted inhabitants, much less, in what manner the progress of recovery could go forward; more particularly during those seasons of the year, when the patients are necessarily confined to the house. Whilst the restoration of those, for whose benefit the establishment has been made, forms a prominent feature in every view which may be given of it, it is nevertheless satisfactory to be enabled to remark, that in other respects, interesting results have attended the prosecution of the concern. The exemplary conduct and harmony which subsist among the different members of the family, the economy and neatness manifested in its domestic regulation, added to the judicious management and consequent productiveness of the soil, appropriated to cultivation, ought not to pass unnoticed.

Impressed with a grateful sense of the blessings which have thus far attended the establishment of the institution, and animated with a belief that its benefits ought to be extended to the number originally designed, it has become a duty, to inform the friends of this afflicted portion of our society, that the Asylum is prepared to accommodate the number of fifty patients; who can now be advantageously and conveniently admitted.

The christian obligation, which would enjoin the propriety of resorting to the means afforded, for restoring to usefulness, those who labour under the various and complicated maladies of the mind; or even supposing no more can be effected, by their application, than to enlarge the limited comfort and happiness of such afflicted individuals, is self-evident. To behold a fellow being, suffering under the agonizing tumult of disordered intellect, and subjected, as is frequently the case, to the most ignominious restraints and the most loathsome habits, is a scene, which the least susceptible mind seldom fails to compassionate. How much more then, ought reasonably to be expected from those, who, with enlightened views and plenteous means, have it in their power to succour or to restore, such objects of commiseration. Notwithstanding the great liberality which has appeared, in affording pecuniary aid. for proceeding thus far with the Asylum, it is incumbered with a debt of fourteen thousand, nine hundred and thirty-three dollars; for the discharge of which, an affectionate appeal is now made to those, who, heretofore, from doubts of the practicability of the plan, or want of information, may have withheld assistance.

Subjoining to these remarks, several interesting documents, illustrative of the opinions and views herein set forth, the managers earnestly recommend the institution to the especial notice and consideration of their brethren in religious profession.

REPORT OF THE BUILDING COMMITTEE.

To the Contributors, Twelfth Month, 1817.

Since the last report of the building committee of the Asylum, the few objects which then remained to claim its attention have been completed, and the institution opened for the reception of patients, under the direction of the board of managers; who, during the last autumn, caused an apparatus for warming the western wing to be constructed.

As this extensive edifice was to be adapted to a plan of restorative treatment in diseases of the mind, on a system hitherto without example in this country, it was to be expected that numerous difficulties would present themselves, requiring much consideration and time to surmount. The work has nevertheless been accomplished—with the hope at least, on the part of those to whose care it was intrusted, that it may answer the benevolent intention of the individuals, who so liberally contributed pecuniary means to effect it. For the information of these, it is deemed proper to furnish the following detailed statement of expenditure.

The accounts of Joseph M. Paul, treasurer to the committee, have been examined, found correct, and the balance in his hands of seventy-nine dollars and twenty-six cents, is directed to be paid to the treasurer to the Contributors.

Statement, showing the amount expended by the building committee of the Contributors to the Asylum, for the relief of persons deprived of their reason.

For which purpose the following articles of association have been agreed upon.

ARTICLE I.

The Association shall be known by the name and title of "The Contributors to the Asylum for the Relief of persons deprived of the use of their Reason.
